

fragments of time

The following poems explore the concept of time while focusing on the contrast between the impermanent and the eternal. They are inspired by ancient Greek literature such as Sappho's fragments and the concept of hamartia, the fatal flaw leading to a character's downfall.

Time is something that unifies us since we're all lost in it. The passing of time helps us to heal. It can bring us together or rip us apart.

In the end, we'll all be nothing but memories.

we will meet again
in another time
but until then
you and I
will be nothing but stories an echo of the memories only heard by the stars

i've never believed in eternity but still longed for it and even our planet is nothing but a graveyard of the empires believed to be eternal death is the price we pay for believing in immortality
our tragedy
our fatal flaw

we've all died
a thousand times
but after death
comes rebirth
and we rise again
all battered and bruised
only to choose
destruction again
after all
only the ephemeral
is truly beautiful
